Date: 01/03/2019

Objective of Programme:

HIV and AIDS pose a very real threat to the health of individuals, families and communities in India and to the progress we have made in recent years as a nation. Although we currently face a number of difficult challenges in our development, including conflict and natural disasters, paying insufficient attention to the warning signs presented by the growing HIV and AIDS epidemic in India could cost us dearly in the long-term. Responding effectively to HIV and AIDS will require a coordinated effort across a number of sectors.

A report on seminar dated 07/02/2015

Objectives of Programme:

- To understand importance of packaging in product management.
- To know latest innovative techniques in packaging sector.

Description of Programme:

Packaging is the science, art and technology of enclosing or protecting products for distribution, storage, sale, and use. Packaging also refers to the process of designing, evaluating, and producing packages.

Dr. Poronita Banarjee told about packaging advancements in the early 20th century included Bakelite closures on bottles, transparent cellophane overwraps and panels on cartons. These innovations increased processing efficiency and improved food safety. As additional materials such as aluminum and several types of plastic were developed, they were incorporated into packages to improve performance and functionality

Dr. Payal Samdariya highlighted many prominent innovations in the packaging industry were developed first for military use. Some military supplies are packaged in the same commercial packaging used for general industry. Other military packaging must transport materiel, supplies, foods, etc. under severe distribution and storage conditions. Packaging problems encountered in World War II led to Military Standard regulations being applied to packaging, which was then designated "military specification packaging.

Prof. Prasanna Puranik told students Packaging may be of several different types. For example, a transport package or distribution package can be the shipping container used to ship, store, and handle the product or inner packages. Some identify a consumer package as one which is directed toward a consumer or household.
